Javits, Republican of New York, said Americans were wrongly being encouraged to honor the convicted murderer.

Senator Adlai E. Stevenson 3d, Democrat of Illinois, said that if Lieutenant Calley was guilty of slaying South Vietnamnese civilians at Mylai as the court-martial determined, he "must pay the penalty."

But in the House, Representative Ed Edmondson, Democrat of Oklahoma, introduced a resolution calling on Congress to urge a full pardon for Lieutenant Calley, who was sentenced to life in prison.

Mr. Scott said that the President "intervened in response to enormous public reaction in the case" and that "there is nothing political contemplated in his ultimate review."

Senator Javits, in a Senate speech, defended the guilty verdict. The United States, he declared, had told the world "we don't observe the 'gook'

Mr. Javits said he hoped, in the name of "mercy and compassion," that the life sentence would be shortened. But he said Americans were mistakenly being urged to give Lieutenant Calley "medals, marches and honor."

"This is not patriotism, but antipatriotism," Mr. Javits said. Senator Stevenson said at a news conference that he did not know what Mr. Nixon intended to do in the case. He added, "I don't know whether he knows what he's doing."

"The country must retain its senses," Mr. Stevenson said, "and it's getting precious little help from the politicians."
