Passengers on Hijacked Jet Recall Anger, Fear,

sengers and four crew members over the weekend, Mr. Halberstadt recalled a sense of doom. That was when rifle shots from Federal agents to grounded outside the control of the sounded outside the control of the command-doom. The control of the command-doom of the command-doom outside the commandsounded outside the plane and, moments later, one of the three hijackers, enraged, fired at the teriorated," he said in a telephone interview yesterday. "They told us the pilot was

I was a dead man."

An hour later, as the jet approached Havana with two of its four main landing-gearting.

House dicision to disable the DC-9 by shooting out its tires:

"They just about got us all killed." its four main landing-gear tires punctured by the rifle fire, Mr. Halberstadt said:

[William R. captain

Back to Normal

Yesterday, the 31 persons who had shared the long ordeal had returned to their homes and begun to resume their normal lives. For most, there were memories of agonizing the 29-hour, terror-filled aerial odyssey that he shared with 30 other Southern Airways passengers and four crew members over the weekend. Mr.

Back to Normal

Yesterday, the 31 persons who had shared the long ordeal had returned to their homes than $2-million—were taken into custody by the Cuban authorities.

During the first stop at Havana, two of the hijackers left the plane briefly and met with the Cuban authorities. But later, they ordered the plane into the air again, apparently because the vana, two of the hijackers left they ordered the plane into the air again, apparently because they ordered the plane into the air again, apparently because the Cuban officials would not accept their terms for asylum.

Topsmics they had extorted from the air line—more than $2-million—were taken into custody by the Cuban authorities.

During the first stop at Havana, two of the hijackers left the plane briefly and met with the Cuban authorities. But later, they ordered the plane into the air again, apparently because the Cuban officials would not accept their terms for asylum.

Mr. Topsmics they normal lives apparently to make sure they carried no concealed weapons.

"It was a little embarrassing at first," Mr. Halberstadt recalled wryly yestenday, "but I decided that, under the circumstances, it wasn't so important."

When the ransom money was placed aboard the plane, several passengers said the hijackers left the plane into the air again, apparently because they carried no concealed weapons.

"It was a little embarrassing at first," Mr. Halberstadt recalled wryly yestenday, "but I was a little embarrassing at first," Mr. Halberstadt recalled wryly yestenday, "but I was a little embarrassing at first," Mr. Halberstadt recalled wryly yestenday, "but I was a little embarrassing at first," Mr. Halberstadt recalled wryly yestenday, "but I was

Federal agents de the plane and, r, one of the three aged, fired at the aged, fired at the Refore they were just docile tires.

"That drove them into a frenzy," Mr. Halberstadt, who lives in Key Biscayne, Fla., said of the tire shooting. "They were raving maniacs after that.

Refore they were just docile to," he said, "but we decided it was too dangerous; he had a "For a while, everything de-griorated," he said in a tele-maniacs."

Before, they were just docile maniacs."

Another passenger, J. Frank Robinson, said of the dicision to attempt to disable the DC-9

However, Arthur C. Tonsmier, a Mobile, Ala., banker, said:
"Maybe it wasn't such a bad idea. Looking back on it, their whole attitude changed after the tires were shot; I think they started to think: 'How do we get out of this alive?' I feel they decided then they had to end it.'

Again to Havana

After the abortive F.B.I. attempt to cripple the plane, which occurred at Orlando, Fla., which occurred at Orlando, Fla., Some passengers accepted the jet landed safely in Havana for the second time in its stewardesses. The hijackers allong odyssey, which also internately sipped vodka from cluded stops at Jackson, Miss.; the airliner's cache of miniature

By ROBERT LINDSEY
Alex Halberstadt, a 47-yearold construction engineer, recalls thinking fleetingly of how thing would be all right."

Hass] walked out of the cockpit and we could see he was okay. He was such a hell of a good pilot I knew then everythree hijackers and the ransom they have looked sitting.

Cleveland, Toronto, Lexington, bottles or from cams of Sprite, Ky., and Chattanooga. After the association and pilot I knew then everythree hijackers and the ransom they had extorted from the airapparently to make sure they they had extorted from the air-apparently to make sure they was still aboard.

"We might have been able to," he said, "but we decided it was too dangerous; he had a gun and had threatened to shoot everybody."

The passengers said life aboard the plane settled into a kind of routine during the 29 hours. After the first few hours, many of them began calling the three hijackers by their first names.

Had to Raise Hands

If anyone wanted to use the rest room, he was allowed to after raising his hand. Most said they managed to get some had been placed on board be-fore the flight and another, a box lunch of fried chicken that

Humor and a Sense of Doom

Melton, 66, of Jonesboro, Ark., said: "They gave me $300 and and fraternization, told me to buy something nice the passengers saw the hijack-for my grandchildren." The cashgifts to passengers were times to one of anger. confiscated by Cuban officials.

Had Long Talks

Mr. Halberstadt said that one hijacker, Louis D. Moore, 27, sat beside him several times and, as he fingered his automatic pistol and a hand grenade, they had long talks. "Louis said they were doing it because they felt they had been wronged by the police and judicial systems," Mr. Halberstadt said the "extremely kind treatment" by the Cuban officials in Havana. "From the moment we landed until [about 15 hours later] they stadt said he said he did not necessarily believe the story, but began to develop a kind of friendship with him.

Despite moments of humor however, times to one of anger.

"Everyone on the aircraft was personally threatened at