salvage the last "1,000 days" of his administration, President Nixon has directed Cabinet officer; to come forward with new programs affecting all areas of government policy.

At the President's direction, Roy L. Ash, director of the Office of Management and Cabinet officers calling for "new thrusts" in domestic policy and using the term "1,000 days" to apply to the remaining 21/2 years of the President's term.

Part of the emphasis is on economic policy because of the administration's concern over the high rate of inflation and record-high interest rates.

The President wants a ser-ies of "new and imaginative" proposals, officials who have seen the Ash letter said. An official OMB acknowledged existence of the directive but would not make it public.

President conferred The yesterday with Ash and other economic advisers in what was described as the first of several meetings designed to find out if there is anything new the government can do to combat inflation.

The President has called on his advisers for "a reassess-ment to see whether any new policy steps can be taken," one official said.

One of the areas of concern -the sluggish housing industry-was discussed in preparation of action the President has promised this week to stimulate housing starts.

An informed source said that the housing recommendations would be modest rather ťhan spectacular.

After the President signed ministration request for legislation establishing the Federal Energy Administration, John C. Sawhill, the administrator, said that gasoline prices, which have accounted for part of the increase in living costs, would hold relatively steady.

On a national average, regular gasoline will hold close to 55 cents a gallon and premium at close to 60 cents, he said, with variations by companies and areas.

The worst is over in gasoline prices rises, Sawhill said at a White House news conference. Gasoline supplies this summer will be "sufficient" if motorists practice conservation, Sawhill said.

In signing the bill, Mr. Nixon said that "by no stretch of the imgination have we yet overcome the energy chal-lenge." He said that there are "disturbing indications" that many Americans believe "good conservation habits can be forgotten."

He said the President was "deeply disappointed" by the attack on the administration's proposal; the attack was led by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.).

The funds are needed to preserve "the military equilibrium" in South Vietnam Warren said.

"This equilibrium was achieved at great cost to the United States and is essential to stability in Southeast Asia," he said.

Since last year's cease-fire, Hanoi "with outside assistance had illegally infiltrated more than 120,000 troops and has illegally introduced large quantities of tanks, artillery, mis-siles and other munitions" into South Vietnam, Warren said.

He said the President hoped Congress would ultimately approve the funds for aid to
