First Lady Pat Nixon quietly resigned a position as honorary chairman of a day-care council nearly one year after her husband had vetoed a child care bill that the council supported, it was learned yesterday.

A spokesman for the non-government Day-Care and Child Development Council of America confirmed that Mrs. Nixon resigned as honorary council chairman effective last November 28, but said the First Lady had not been active in her role and the council did not issue a press statement at the time.
