

Resisting the Rap With Sterilized Innocence

by Nicholas von Hoffman

Tom Charles Huston, the White House aide who wrote the famous memo proposing the use of burglary, has written of Richard Nixon's moral agnosticism: " . . . a congenital grandstander, always anxious to please and constantly concerned about his place in history . . . The President abhors confrontations, most particularly those based on philosophical convictions. . . " (The Alternative, June-September, 1973, issue.)
