

NOV 27 1970

HANOI INSISTS U.S. HIT FAR IN NORTH

Spokesman in Paris Asserts Raids Killed 49 Civilians

By HENRY GINIGER
Special to The New York Times

PARIS, Nov. 26—North Vietnam continued to insist today that American bombers had ranged far north of the 19th Parallel last Saturday and Sunday, and a spokesman here said that 49 civilians had died in the raids and 40 had been wounded.

Hanoi's delegation to the peace talks here called a news conference, the third since last Saturday, to give details in a further denial of assertions in Washington that only military targets below the 19th Parallel had been attacked.

At the same time, Nguyen Than Le, the spokesman, refused to acknowledge explicitly that the United States had conducted a commando raid to free prisoners from a camp near Hanoi. He would speak only in general terms of "acts of war."

Mr. Le said 28 persons had been killed in a restaurant in Hatinh, which is below the 19th Parallel. Six died in the bombing of a sanatorium in Hatay province near Hanoi, he said. Three schools in Quangbinh Province in the southern part of the country were also hit, and a day care center in Hatay Province was burned by phosphorous bombs, according to the spokesman. No casualties were given for the latter attacks.

100 Homes Reported Destroyed

Mr. Le said that 100 civilian homes had been destroyed and that United States-made Shrike missiles had fallen around Hanoi, one of them six miles to the north and another about four miles to the west. Defense Secretary Melvin R. Laird has implied that damage near Hanoi was from North Vietnam's own anti-aircraft missiles that had fallen back to earth. But, Mr. Le asked, "Does North Vietnam have Shrike missiles?"

A delegation communiqué referred to Mr. Laird's statement of an operation to save lives of American war prisoners. But Mr. Le would not be drawn into discussion of what had occurred during this raid and what casualties, if any, had resulted from it.

Mr. Le gave the impression that he considered the rescue operation as a diversion from the main subject — American bombings that had hit nonmilitary objectives and had caused civilian casualties north and south of the 19th Parallel.

When he was asked what North Vietnam would do in the case of another prisoner-camp raid Mr. Le said that the people and armed forces "will continue to punish all acts that violate the security and sovereignty of the Democratic Republic of Vietnam."

The North Vietnamese policies toward war prisoners is invariable, he said. Although they have committed war crimes, they are being treated "with humanity," he declared, adding that in general the prisoners enjoyed good health. Some died he reported, when their planes were shot down by anti-aircraft fire or when their parachutes did not function properly. Those who were injured received medical treatment. Mr. Le cited the case of Cmdr. John McCain, son of Adm. John S. McCain, commander of United States forces in the Pacific, who had been badly wounded but "thanks to our treatment has been restored to health."

Secretary Laird had cited reports the death of 17 American prisoners as a reason for the raid.

First Protest in Paris

Mr. Le's effort to keep the news conference concentrated on what the American attacks were alleged to have done to North Vietnamese civilians appeared aimed at capitalizing on hostile popular reactions to the American initiatives.

In Paris, for the first time since the peace talks here, the Government allowed an anti-American street demonstration to take place.

Several thousand Communists and other leftists marched from the Place de la Bastille in the eastern part of the capital. Up to today the Government had forbidden all demonstrations related to Vietnam as long as France was the site of the peace conference.

Yesterday the Government declared after a Cabinet meeting that it deplored "the military operations carried out recently over the territory of the Democratic Republic of Vietnam" "They do not appear of a nature to hasten the end of the war nor to facilitate a negotiated settlement," the Government said.

A spokesman for the Ministry of the Interior said today the demonstration had not been authorized but had not been forbidden either.