Allies Won't Resume

Paris Talks

The United States and South Vietnam said yesterday they see no useful purpose in resuming the Vietnam peace talks today as demanded by North Vietnam and the Viet Cong.

"Everything seems to indicate that what you are seeking is still a military victory in the field and not a negotiated solution at the conference table," the allies said in a joint statement to the two Communist delegations.

The United States and South Vietnam who broke off the conference May 4 said they would resume as soon as the Communists clearly showed an intention "to negotiate seriously on matters of substance."
