

Hanoi Barracks in South Stoned

5 Hurt as Mobs Break Into Cease-Fire Unit Camps
at Da Nang and Hue

NYTimes

By HENRY KAMM

Special to The New York Times

DA NANG, South Vietnam, Feb. 25—Mobs of demonstrators threw rocks at the barracks of North Vietnamese members of the Four-Party Joint Military Commission here and in Hue today.

Five North Vietnamese in Hue were reported slightly injured. In both cities the crowds, shouting slogans and carrying anti-Communist banners, swept aside South Vietnamese military guards.

The Da Nang demonstrators, about 2,000 in number, according to a policeman who watched, arrived in the vicinity of the camp housing the North Vietnamese in buses and trucks.

Sentry Is Driven Back

They came down within a few hundred yards of the camp and marched to the gates.

The policeman said that they had brought the rocks they threw with them from the city proper. They scaled the gate into the camp, and, apparently knowing where the Communist barracks were, made straight for them.

Only one North Vietnamese sentry was reported to have been outside the barracks, which house more than 20

Continued on Page 2, Column 3

Continued From Page 1, Col. 5

North Vietnamese delegates. The sentry retreated inside under a hail of rocks.

The melee was brought to an end more than an hour later by a colonel from the South Vietnamese delegation to the Military Commission, who told the demonstrators that it was senseless to damage South Vietnamese property.

Tonight, rolls of barbed wire had been placed on the top of the camp's gates. But dozens of banners and posters, demanding that the Communists go home to the North, remained attached to the Communist barracks as well as the entrance gate.

Some Injured at Hue

In Hue, the demonstrators' rocks drew blood, but it was reported here that the injuries were minimal. The bandages of the injured North Vietnamese were said to be more impressive than their wounds seemed to warrant.

The injured refused to be treated by a Canadian physician on the International Commission of Control and Supervision, or by an American doctor.

Both the International Commission and the Joint Military Commission were created by the Paris agreement of last month to monitor the cease-fire. The International Commission is made up of delegates from Hungary, Poland, Indonesia and Canada, while the members of the Military Commission are supposed to represent the North and South Vietnamese, the United States and the Vietcong.

The Military Commission's regional teams here in Da-Nang and in Hue have not been functioning thus far, because of the unexplained unwillingness of the Vietcong's Provisional Revolutionary Government to send representatives to serve on the body.

B-52s Used in Cambodia

HONOLULU, Feb. 25 (AP)—The American air war over Cambodia was stepped up today and heavy bombers were used for the first time in nearly a month, the Pacific Military Command reported today.

The command said in its daily statement that United States aircraft, including B-52s, had conducted operations over Cambodia at the request of the Cambodian Government. The heavy bombers were last used over Cambodia on Jan. 29, according to command reports.

Sources at the command said that the increased air activity today was a response to "the increase in enemy activity throughout much of Cambodia." Air activity there yesterday was described as light, involving only tactical aircraft in scattered areas.

There were no United States operations over Laos today, a command spokesman said.