

Associated Press

In a large, bare room of the North Vietnamese prison, Ly Nam De, in downtown Hanoi, some personal possessions of American prisoners remained on Saturday, the day after they had been freed. This was the first time the former French prison, known as the Hanoi Hilton, has been empty in eight years.

North Vietnamese guards looking through some magazines and notebooks left behind. "They had much more reading material," said a guard, but prisoners took it with them.