U.S. Agency Plans Security Reduction As Bombings Drop

WASHINGTON, May 11 (AP) —With antiwar bombing tapering off, the General Services Administration is drafting plans to reduce security in many Federal buildings across the country.

The agency, which manages about 5,000 buildings, says it will probably inspect fewer packages and post fewer uniformed guards at doors where the "local political climate" permits. Some sealed entrances will also be opened.

The planned reduction in security has kindled resentment among some Federal officers. The reduction is a result of budget cuts.

"I blame it on do-gooders who have never seen a guy's head bashed in or his guts spilled all over the floor," said one plainclothesman, referring to a fatal stabbing in an Executive Office Building restroom.

But an official from another agency said, "Some people in the Administration have been concerned that rigid security makes Washington resemble a banana republic under siege."

The nationwide security crackdown began in October, 1970, after a one-day wave of bombings in Rochester, N. Y.

The G.S.A., for example, closed all but two of its 16 entrances, and they have remained sealed.

Col. Frank McKetta, commander of the agency's 4,400-man Federal protective service, said bombings at Federal installations have dropped from 37 in 1970 to 29 in 1971 and 15 last year.
