in Des Moines, Iowa, posed a difficult diplomatic problem for the White House. One authoritative White House source said that, in his view, Mr. Agnew could only have meant that "tacit under-standings" given to President Johnson by North Vietnam in return for the cessation of bombing on Nov. 1, 1968, had been violated by the North Vietnamese. Thus Mr. Agnew's view was interpreted by the source as a believe the United States had nothing to show in return for the bombing halt other than North Vietnamese agreement last January on the shape of the bargaining table at the Pari peace talks. Question of Retaliation Other White House officials acknowledged privately that for epresent the Administration of views and not necessarily those of the White House. Agnew Unavailable Asked later whether the as-sessment of the White House sources of the meaning of Mr. Agnew's remarks, was an ac-curate appraisal of the Admin-istration's viewpoint, Ronald L. Ziegler, the White House press to ask the Vice President on this. He delivered the speech." Mr. Agnew, who remained in Cape Kennedy, Fla., following the launching of Apollo 12, was not available for comment. Robert J. McCloskey, the State Department's spokesman, refused to make any comment on Mr. Agnew's speech. W. Averell Harriman, who was criticized by Mr. Agnew for his role in the Paris talks, said last night, "I don't think that the statement deserves
