M.I.T. Cuts Agency Ties

Special to The New York Times WASHINGTON, April 26— The Center of International Studies at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology dis-closed today that it would "re-luctantly" sever connections with the Central Intelligence Agency at the end of June. The agency helped to estab. lish the center with a $300,000 grant in 1951 and since then has supported much of its research, mostly in Communist affairs.

A spokesman for the center said it was decided a year ago that, "for practical and not moral reasons," no further con-tracts should be accepted from the C.I.A. Although the work supported by agency funds has done much good and has involved nothing improper, the relationship had been "misunderstood" and has "caused sufficient difficulty," he said.

In its early years, the center performed a great deal of research work for the intelligence agency, supplying analyses of events and trends in the Communist world but insisting upon the right to publish the results of the work. In recent years, after faculty members and others criticized the arrangement, the number of C.I.A. projects is said to have been caused to M.I.T. scholars earlier in their dealings with foreign governments when it was disclosed that the agency had helped to reate their center. Faculty pimion about the link was described as divided until Mr. Millikan passed word of the decision to accept no more research and the agency on tributed no more than 15 per cent, or $112,500, of the center's $750,000 budget. The exact amounts are classified as secret by the agency, he said. One early beneficiary of the agency's support was a research team on Soviet affairs headed by Prof. Walt W. Rostow, who later became chairman of the Policy Planing Council at the State Department and is now a special assistant to President Johnson. Prof. Max Millikan, an assistant to President Johnson. Prof. Max Millikan, an assistant director of the intelligence agency in 1951-52, has been director of the center since 1952.

The authorities at M.I.T. have tried in recent days to make clear that they have not conducted any overseas operations and that the center's work in Johnson except any other kind of and that the center's work in India and other nations to help promote economic development has not been supported by the institutions, such as Harvard, that he eresided to accept agency.
