Admiral Is Named Deputy Director of the C.I.A.

CIA

Johnson Appoints Taylor to Post Vacated by Helms

By NEIL SHEEHAN Special to The New York Times WASHINGTON, Sept. 20-

President Johnson announced today that he would nominate Vice Adm. Rufus L. Taylor to be the new deputy director of the Central Intelligence Agency.

If his nomination is approved by the Senate, Admiral Taylor, at present deputy director of the Defense Intelligence Agency, will fill the position vacated by Richard Helms when he was recently made Director of Cenrecently made Director of Cen-tral Intelligence. Admiral Taylor met with the President today at the White House and was later introduced by Mrs. Johnson to the press in the President's oval room

The President said Admiral The President said Admiral Taylor had been recommended for the post by Secretary of State Dean Rusk, Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara and Mr. Helms.

Naval Intelligence Expert Worked on Japanese Code

Admiral Taylor, the first naval intelligence specialist to attain the rank of admiral, is considered the Navy's foremost intelligence expert. Before be-coming Deputy Director of the Defense Intelligence Agency in June of this year, he served as Director of Naval Intelli-gence gence. A 1933 graduate of the United

A 1933 graduate of the United States Naval Academy, Admiral Taylor began his career as a line officer on the battleship Arizona and later transferred to communications work. He then became an intelli-gence specialist in Japanese affairs, acquiring fluency in the Japanese language at the Amer-ican Embassy in Tokyo from 1938 to 1941. During World War II the

During World War II the obtaining of intelligence by monitoring an enemy's communication network developed into nication network developed into a complicated art and Admiral Taylor, because of his knowl-edge of both communications and the Japanese language, be-came an important member of the naval communication intel-ligence organization and Mr. Helms. The law stipulates that only one of the two highest ranking officials in the C.I.A. may be a military man and it has be-come the custom in recent years to fill one of the two senior positions in the agency with a military officer and the other with a civilian. At meetings of the United States Intelligence Board, a body that coordinates the en-tire American intelligence-itself. Massociated Press Wirephoto Nee Adm. Rufus L. Taylor Associated Press Wirephoto Nee Adm. Rufus L. Taylor positions in the agency with a military officer and the other At meetings of the United States Intelligence Board, a tire American intelligence-itself.