CIA Saigon Peace Candidate Released After 5 Years

Truong Dinh Dzu, Rival of Thieu in '67, Urged Talks With Vietcong 1973 NYTimes

By The A ociated Press SAIGON, South Vietnam, March 26 — Truong Dinh Dzu, a peace candidate in the 1967 presidential election, was released from jail today after nearly five years in which he was one of South Vietnam's best-known political prisoners.

Mr. Dzu, a 56-year-old lawyer, was reported by his daughter to be sick and weary on his return home from Chi Hoa Prison in Saigon. He remained in seclusion.

The release was viewed as an attempt by President Nguyen Van Thieu to improve his public image before his visit next week with President Nixon and lead to a type of coalition Gov-United States Congressional ernment in South Vietnam. He leaders in San Clemente, Calif., polled a surprising 18 per cent and Washington.

Among the prominent figures still held as political prisoners criticized heavily over the is Tran Ngoc Chau, 48, who years, particularly by some has been serving a 10-year sen-American Congressmen, for tence, imposed in 1970, for keeping political opponents in having had "treasonable" con- jail. Mr. Dzu's name has been tacts with his brother, a spy mentioned frequently. for the North Vietnamese. Mr. Chau, an anti-Communist, was arrested on charges involving a principal architect of the check fraud and sentenced to pacification program.

During the 1967 campaigns, In May of that year, he was Mr. Dzu advocated negotiations brought before a military tribuwith the Vietcong, arguing that of the vote against Mr. Thieu. President Thieu has been

Truong Dinh Dzu

Early in 1968, Mr. Dzu was a brief prison term and fine.

such talks eventually would Continued on Page 7, Column I

Continued From Page 1, Col. 7

nal on charges of advocating neutrality and negotiations with the Vietcong.

He was sentenced to five years at hard labor for what the court deemed "an action that has weakened the anti-Communist will of the people and the army."

That sentence was reduced to four years in 1971. He was eligible for release on May 1, 1972. According to Mr. Dzu's wife, authorities at Chi Hoa Prison arranged for his release and turned him over to the national police, in line with administrative procedures.

Mrs. Dzu said that her husband was detained at the national police center on May 1, 1972, then returned to Chi Hoa for "temporary detention." She maintains that police authorities told her that her husband had to wait for a decision from Mr. Thieu.

About two weeks ago, Mrs. Dzu sent letters to the Presi-dent and to several legislative dent and to several legislative leaders, appealing for her hus-band's release by pointing out that his term was up and that the Thieu regime had negotiat-ed with the Vietcong.

Future Role in Question

Before his 1967 campaign and his imprisonment, Mr. Dzu was not too well known. He is said to have no real political base. His participation in the political confrontation expect-ed after United States troops withdraw thus remains an open question. question.

Two other key political factors for the political factors have been political factors have been forced to combine into three potentially powerful anti-Communist groups in anticipation of the political struggle. Mr. Dzu has not played a prominent role in any.

Two other key political forces lay low while the deadline passed for political parties to register under last year's strict and controversial presidential decree decree.

Seven Parties Combine

Seven anti-Communist par-ties beat the deadline by join-ing forces yesterday in the So-cialist Democratic partice. Ing forces yesterday in the So-cialist Democratic party. It is not expected to be strongly anti-Government. Two other technically legal groups are the predominantly Roman Catholic Freedom party and Mr. Thieu's own Democracy party, which has been recruiting vigorously in recent weeks. in recent weeks.

Conspicuous by their inactivity so far are the An Quang Pagoda militants, who say they Pagoda militants, who say they represent the majority of Bud-dhists in South Vietnam, and former President Duong Van Minh and his supporters. Both groups believe they should have a place in the "neutral third segment" of the National Coun-cil of National Reconciliation and Concord, which the Paris agreements say should organize elections. elections.