Panel Backs Bush For C.I.A. as Ford Bars Political Bid

NYTimes DEC 1 9 1975 By NICHOLAS M. HORROCK

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18-The Senate Armed Services Committee voted today to approve the nomination of George Bush as Director of Central Intelligence, after President Ford ruled out the 51-year-old former member of Congress as a possible running mate in 1976.

The committee's 12-to-4 approval of Mr. Bush presumably assures his confirmation by the full Senate early next year, but several senior Congressional sources said that the political "cost" to President Ford was

"excessive."

In ruling out Mr. Bush from consideration as a running mate, Mr. Ford reversed a position taken last November during an appearance on the television panel show "Meet the Press." At that time the President said he would not rule out Mr. Bush because "I don't think people with talents, individuals with capabilities and a record ought to be excluded Continued on Page 30, Column 2

Mr. Bush said today that he running mate. had not contemplated his fu-

From the moment Mr. Bush as nominated in November From the moment Mr. Bush was nominated in November to head the C.I.A., White House strategists have known that he faced stiff opposition from Democrats who believed his political background was unsuitable for the position.

But when the committee's

But when the committee's public hearings on the nominapublic hearings on the nomination opened Monday, the opposition among Democrats to Mr. Bush seemed, one source said, "manageable," in the sense that the White House "had the votes to win in committee and on the floor."

By late Tuesday, however, since the White House had learned in 1947. that seven, and possibly eight, that seven, and possibly eight, of the committee members as a member of Congress from would vote against Mr. Bush. Texas, Mr. Bush was chairman Would vote against Mr. Bush. Texas, Mr. Bush was chairman The nominee met with Mr. Ford of the Republican National several times Wednesday for Committee and United States a total of about an hour and bassador to the United Nations a half. It was the advice of before Mr. Ford sent him to White House strategists at those meetings that if Mr. Bush wanted to become C.I.A. directions.

Continued From Page 1, Col. 6 from any further public service."

tor without a massive battle and long delay in 1976, he must be willing to give up hopes of becoming Mr. Ford's had not contemplated his future beyond service in the C.I.A. Since it was President Ford ruling out Mr. Bush as a running mate in 1976, rather than Mr. Bush making a pledge not to run, Mr. Bush presumably would be free to accept a Vice-Presidential nomination from any other Republican or Democrat. But there is no serious suggestion that one will be offered.

Mr. Ford's action today, however, was credited with getting the nomination four votes in the Armed Services Committee and thus permitting it to be reported to the Senate floor with the committee's recommendations.

Senator Henry M. Jackson, Democrat of Washington, who is a committee member, had given the President a relatively graceful opening to deal with the situation the day before when he suggested that although Mr. Bush might not or run for the Vice-Presidency, Mr. Ford could simply rule him out. By 7 P.M. yesterday, the decison had been made and Mr. Ford drafted a letter to John C. Stennis, the Mississippi Democrat who is chairman of the committee.

"Ambassador Bush and I agree that the nation's immediate foreign intelligence needs must take precedence over other presidents." Senator Henry M. Jackson, floor with the committee's recommendations.

Senator Frank Church, Democrat of Idaho, who is chairman of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence and a leading opponent of Mr. Bush's nomination, said that though he would vote against confirmation, he would not lead a floor fight to halt the appointment.

diate foreign intelligence needs must take precedence over other considerations and there should be continuity in the C.I.A. leadership," Mr. Ford's letter said in part. "Therefore if Ambassador Bush is confirmed by the Senate as Director of Central Intelligence, I will not consider him as my Vice-Presidential running mate in 1976."

floor fight to halt the appointment.

Mr. Bush said in an interview that he hoped the President's action would remove "legitimate doubts of his willingness to concentrate on the intelligence post. He said he had "urged and supported" Mr. Ford's decision to take him out of the running. "I have no worries about my own future," he said,

Mr. Bush said he hoped that the full Senate could consider the matter before the Christmas recess, but that several senators had told him that it was clear his appointment and several others would be held over until January.

Letter to Stennis

will not consider him as my Vice-Presidential running mate in 1976."

The committee met shortly before 10 A.M. and debated some 45 minutes in closed session. It voted in public session and the President's letter was given to the press.

The core of objection to Mr. Bush has been that his partisan political background might create conflict of interest problems for a Director of Central Intelligence. And a possible Vice-Presidential running mate in 1976."

The committee met shortly before 10 A.M. and debated some 45 minutes in closed session. It voted in public session and the President's letter was given to the press.

The core of objection to Mr. Bush has been that his partisan political background might create conflict of interest problems for a Director of Central Intelligence. And a possible Vice-Presidential running mate in 1976."

The committee met shortly before 10 A.M. and debated some 45 minutes in closed session. It voted in public session and the President's letter was given to the press.

The core of objection to Mr. Bush has been that his partisan political background might create conflict of interest problems for a Director of Central Intelligence. And a possible vice-Presidential running mate in 1976."

The committee met shortly before 10 A.M. and debated some 45 minutes in 1976."

The core of objection to Mr. Bush has been that his partisan political background might create conflict of interest problems for a Director of Cent

Responsible Republican Con-Responsible Republican Congressional sources believe that the White House made a "strategy error" in sending up Mr. Bush's name without being "immediately willing to forget the Vice-Presidential matter" the Vice-Presidential matter" and that it hurts the President's credibility on Capitol Hill when he has to reverse his position completely to get his nominee

If confirmed, Mr. Bush will be a departure from the kind of men chosen to head the C.I.A. in the past. He will be the first director with a strongly partisan political background since the agency was formed