Sen. Church
 Talks of CIA
 And Terror

By Ralph Craig

U.S. Senator Frank Church said here yesterday that terrorist attacks against Cuban airliners and Cuban diplomats might be an unanticipated result of Central Intelligence Agency activities of the 1960s.

Before the 1961 Bay of Pigs misadventure, he said, "We really established a force capable of terrorist activities." The United States, he said, "hired exiles" from the Castro revolution, trained them and made them potentially dangerous.

"They are highly motivated; some of them are people who had lost everything."

Church said that he did not believe that there was any CIA involvement in a series of incidents that prompted Premier Fidel Castro to abrogate a U.S.-Cuban hijacking treaty October 15.

The senator, who headed a 16-month investigation of surreptitious, illegal activities by the CIA, FBI and Internal Revenue Service, was in the Bay Area for a series of blitz campaign appearances for the Carter-Mondale Democratic presidential ticket.

Church, together with California Governor Brown, Senator Henry Jackson of Washington and Representative Morris Udall of Arizona, all four former seekers of their party's nomination, heads a 13-state Western Campaign Coordinating Committee working for the man who beat them.

In 8½ hours yesterday, Church made seven campaign addresses, beginning in San Francisco and then moving south through Palo Alto to San Jose. In San Francisco, aides tucked at his sleeves between appearances to insure that the hectic schedule was maintained.

His day began at the 11 a.m. "celebration that takes place every Sunday at Glide Memorial Methodist Church. An exuberant standing-room-only crowd at the unconventional church service gave the Idaho Democrat a standing ovation. Former Black Panther leader Eldridge Cleaver got the same kind of reception although he did not speak.

Watergate and other activities of former President Richard Nixon and of former Vice President Spiro Agnew demonstrated a contempt for law which the two men had sworn to uphold, Church said.

"The same attitudes of disdain for the rights of people and contempt for the law "were involved in the intelligence scandals," he said.

The senator next went to the Sheraton Palace Hotel for a brunch.

In addition to repeating much of his earlier message, he said he believed that new legislation and a new permanent intelligence watchdog committee, headed by Senator Daniel Inouye (Dem-Hawaii), would effectively prevent future abuses by the nation's "intelligence community."
