This is the most incredible Howard Hughes story ever told—in a book already making publishing history.

It is written by James Phelan, the investigative journalist who exposed the Clifford Irving hoax in 1972. The astonishing facts come from two Hughes employees who took care of Hughes during his last years and who approached Phelan with their startlingly intimate material after the billionaire's death. (They are the only Hughes employees willing to break "the boss's" rule of silence.)

Howard Hughes: The Hidden Years reveals not only the mystery of how Hughes died, but the secrets of how he lived, during the lost, last years of hiding, isolation, and flight. The book discloses how the once-dashing Texan spent most of his time naked, compulsively watching movies...how drugs dominated his lonely existence...how his eating and grooming habits became more and more bizarre...how he suddenly fired his $520,000-a-year chief executive, Robert Maheu...and how he was totally dependent on the six aides who were Hughes' appointed keepers in his self-imposed asylum.

From a wealth of dramatic new information, and from his own twenty years of reporting on Hughes, James Phelan has succeeded in writing the book no one ever expected to read: the truth about Howard Hughes.
