WASHINGTON, Feb. 17—tioner.

Representative Ogden R. Reid of Westchester disclosed today that the Army's controversial intelligence surveillance of civilian dissent and political activity was so widely known in government from 1968 on that even the military aides to all 50 state Governors were informed of its scope and operations.

He said that the list of He said that the list of Army surveillance plan in the spring of 1968 included the President's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board, the National Security Council, the Central Intelligence Agency, the Treasury Department, the Justice Department, the Atomic Energy Commission, the Subversive that even the military aides to all 50 state Governors were informed of its scope and operations.

Mr. Reid revealed — with grudging Army permission—the partial contents of the May 2, 1968, intelligence collection plan that started the Army on its two-year program of spying on civilian civil rights workers, anti-war activists and politically active groups and individuals.

The Representative disclosed that a total of 319 Government officials, including the leaders of 19 civilian agencies were aware of the Army's broadly stated intention to spy and gather dossiers on lawabiding civilian activity.

"The remarkable thing about it," Mr. Reid said in an interview, "is that the Army's 1968 intelligence collection plan was distributed to 319 individuals, including the adjutants general of all 50 states, and yet no one had the sense or the courage to question what they were doing."

"To me, it's almost as disturbing that so many remained silent as that this was conceived in the first place," he said.

A partial list of addresses who received the "confidential" civilian intelligence plan was the only part of a thick file of classified Army officials today to let him discuss with a question political leaders.
