The Major Events of the Day

International

About 1,750 men from the ethnic Turkish enclave of Limassol in Cyprus and surrounding Turkish villages are penned behind coils of barbed-wire on the sun-baked playing field of Limassol's municipal soccer stadium. Although the men are dressed in street clothes and say they are civilians, they are being held as prisoners of war by the Greek Cypriotes. Since they and other Turkish prisoners are the Greek Cypriotes' chief bargaining card in any future negotiations with the Turks, the prospects for their early release appear dim. [1:2.]

The Turkish Government announced that it had taken 783 Greek and Greek Cypriote prisoners during the fighting in Cyprus. Greek Cypriotes say they hold 1,750 Turkish prisoners of war. Exchange of prisoners is likely to be one of the first items on the agenda at the Geneva talks. [1:3.]

"My boy, my boy," shouted an aged Greek woman as she greeted her 61-year-old son, one of the political prisoners released from confinement on the prison island of Gyaros who arrived in Athens after the fall of the junta. Wives, children and friends, also embraced the political exiles and offered large bouquets. The man who had jailed many of them, former Brig. Gen. Demetrios Ioannides, was under comfortable house arrest at a military resort. [1:1-2.]

National

In the second day of its general impeachment debate, a large, bipartisan majority of the House Judiciary Committee appeared ready to adopt a resolution formally proposing President Nixon's impeachment. Nearly all of the Democrats and a half dozen of the Republicans on the committee declared sharply or hinted broadly that they would support one or both of the central proposed articles of impeachment. [1:8.]

The Supreme Court raised major hurdles to merging city and suburban schools for racial integration by all but banning the busing of children across school district lines for desegregation. The 5-to-4 ruling, involving Detroit and its suburbs, was viewed by supporters of school integration as their most serious setback since the victory they won when the Court prohibited busing of children across district lines for
