The Major Events of the Day

International

South Vietnamese Government troops were reported today to be holding at least two strong points in the embattled provincial capital of Phuoc Binh, which was said to have been invaded several times by North Vietnamese troops and tanks. The Saigon military command said the defenders had repulsed an apparently light attack by the North Vietnamese. The command again denied reports that the town had fallen and said that radio communication with the provincial headquarters was being maintained. [Page 1, Column 1.]

Insurgents launched fresh assaults against a besieged Cambodian Government force on the Mekong River two miles east of Phnom Penh in what observers said might be a prelude to an all-out offensive against the capital. They have fired about 36 rockets into Phnom Penh since New Year's Day, killing or wounding 40 persons. President Lon Nol visited a battlefield and ordered field commanders to fight the rebels "at all costs in order to achieve a military victory." [2:6:8.] Overwork among wives with jobs outside the home is being recognized worldwide as a "serious problem," according to a study by the International Labor Organization, an agency of the United Nations based in Geneva. "A more equitable sharing of the burden of housework and the care of children between men and women," is one approach to the problem of the overworked wife, the study said, and such a sharing is one of the "prerequisites of sexual equality." The study was prepared for a meeting of the I.L.O.'s 125 member nations in Geneva in June, with the hope that its recommendations would become national laws. [1:1:3.]

President Ford named an eight-member commission headed by Vice President Rockefeller to investigate allegations of domestic spying by the Central Intelligence Agency. Ron Neessen, the White House press secretary, said that the eight had been chosen as respected citizens who had no former connection with the C.I.A. He said the completion date for commissions report is April 14 and that it would eventually be made public. [1:8.]

Agency would not keep Congress from investigating the matter. Senator Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania, the Senate Republican leader, said that he expected Congressional inquiries to continue long after the commission's report was completed. He praised the President's choice of members, and said the commission was "truly blue ribbon."

Some other members of Congress were not so enthusiastic. Senator William Proxmire, Wisconsin Democrat, said the choice of Vice President Rockefeller as the chairman "leaves something to be desired." [1:6:17.]

A study by the Council on Economic Priorities, a nonprofit public interest organization, has found that the limited scope of competition among drug companies in the sale of seven antibiotics costs consumers at least $180-million a year. The seven drugs are available from many different manufacturers. In five of the seven drugs, the most widely sold version of each was the one with the highest price. [1:5:7.]

Thousands of Americans who are living on fixed incomes or are unemployed cannot afford to pay their heating bills this winter. Distributors of natural gas, oil, electricity and other heating fuels are cutting them off in sharply increased numbers. "I think if it really got cold," a major New York oil distributor said, "you'd see between 20 and 40 per cent of our customers unable to meet our credit terms." [1:2:4.]

The Beame administration, which has been laying off city employees because of the fiscal crisis, has failed to fill even one-third of the number of public-service jobs available under a program totally financed by the Federal Government. The regional office of the Labor Department, which finances the jobs program, has warned city officials that if they do not speed up the program, its funding—amounting to over $150-million—could be jeopardized.
