

Demos Add Stans To Spying Charge

WASHINGTON — (AP) — Democrats asserted that former Commerce Secretary Maurice Stans supplied $114,000 in Republican campaign funds to finance the activities of the men who broke into Democratic National Committee headquarters last June.

Stans' name was linked to the case as the Democrats attempted to file an amended complaint in their civil invasion of privacy suit.

But U.S. District Judge Charles Richey directed attorneys for the Democrats to file an enabling motion before filing their amended complaint. The lawyers are expected to comply tomorrow.

An amended complaint in the Democrats' civil invasion-of-privacy suit was filed today in U.S. District Court.

The new complaint added Stans, finance chairman for the Committee for the Re-Election of the President, and Hugh W. Sloan Jr., former committee treasurer, to the list of defendants and upped the request for damages from $1 million to $3 million.

Stans has denied any knowledge of diversion of campaign funds to the break-in attempt.

The amended civil complaint alleges that G. Gordon Liddy and E. Howard Hunt Jr., former White House aides, and James W. McCord, former security chief for the Committee for the Re-Election of the President made regular visits to a motel listening post from which it said taps on Democratic committee telephones were monitored.

Democratic campaign officials, who released copies of the complaint shortly before it was filed in U.S. District Court, said they had no idea who supplied the bugging details to their attorneys.

The Washington Post reported today that the account came from a man who identified himself as the principal monitor of the telephone taps in operation from late May until June 17.

The Post did not identify the individual.

Federal investigators and Republican campaign officials declined to comment on the story.

On June 17, police arrested five men, including McCord, inside Democratic Party headquarters.

The complaint alleged that Liddy and Hunt also participated in the break-in but were warned by a lookout and got away.
