

Monday-Go-Round

"WELL," MUSED John Robinson, scanning the Watergate headlines Friday, "I see that Frank Sinatra isn't the only one who's singing in the White House these days."

OH, SPEAKING of that, one of my Berkeley elitist friends with tete d'oeuf, Donald Weeks, has dredged up the fact that in 1855, at Cambridge University, Charles Stuart Glaverly, the parodist, offered an examination for a prize in the study of "Pickwick Papers." Question 19: "What is a red-faced Nixon?" Are we about to find out, 118 years later?
