Over The Watergate

MR. WRIGHT: Well, Tricky Dick did it again, just as I predicted. In his speech on Watergate he came off snow white, cool, smooth as silk. The President stands aloof, king of the White House. — Art Fry.

I don't hear many people shouting, "Long live the King!"

MR. WRIGHT: About "One Who Didn't Know." You neglected to say whether you wanted him crucified, racked, hung up by the "you know what" or simply shot at dawn. That is, if one is shot simply. There was a guy from Nazareth who was sold down the river for a lousy 20 pieces of silver. Discouraging, ain't it? — H. William Way.

Nazareth is a far piece from Whittier, Calif.

MR. WRIGHT: Now President Nixon asks newsmen to give him hell any time he is wrong. A perfect opportunity for you and your colleagues to let him know you don't like to see newsmen imprisoned for nothing more dastardly than refusing to reveal a news source. — V.R.M.K.

The way things are shaping up, going to jail may be the simplest way for a newsman to interview a White House spokesman.
