

Memo From John J. Miller

MARTHA MITCHELL

Automobile bumper stickers are popping up around the Big Town that read: "Hi . . . I'm Martha . . . Fly me to Watergate!" . . . With everyone trying to get into the act about Watergate, it's no wonder that there's even a new young stripper who's calling herself Watta Gate.

Meanwhile, as if he didn't already have enough to think about, Jeane Dixon, the famed future teller, sat down and wrote Richard M. Nixon a long, painfully detailed letter telling the President all about how she predicted the entire Watergate fiasco in his administration way back in 1968—long before anyone else even knew there was going to be the famed Nixon landslide re-election in '72.

Dixon says she told the President in her letter that "foreign governments" manipulated the Watergate scandal and that two of the personalities now involved are actually "double agents."

She also assured Nixon that despite all the grim circumstances he's facing, including "talk of impeachment," that everything's going to work out OK for him.

The management of the Watergate in Washington, D.C. reports that all its recent publicity has brought hordes of souvenir seekers down on the apartment-hotel complex. The mobs searching for Watergate mementoes have thus far cost the management over $100,000 in stolen ash trays, stationery, towels and just about everything else that isn't nailed down.

The only thing the Watergate management is smiling about at all these days is its liquor store, which sells the hotel's own brands of liquor with "Watergate" fully emblazoned across the labels.

All the Watergate labeled brands have been selling-out almost daily.

DIANA ROSS will pick up more than $500,000 for making a fast concert tour of Japan in July.

Diana's "Lady Sings The Blues" has been doing mite box office business there and the current public demand for her to appear in Japan is incredible.
