

Ex-Cop's Watergate Story

'Hush' Money

Washington

A former New York City policeman has told Senate investigators that he disbursed "hush" money to cover up the Watergate scandal, it was learned yesterday.

Sources close to the investigation said Anthony T. Ulasewicz conducted staff personnel of the Senate Watergate Committee to places in the Washington area where the money had been turned over to an intermediary for the Watergate conspirators.

The sources said that Ulasewicz, 55, went so far as to pose for pictures with the investigators at the locations where the money had been dropped. It could not be learned authoritatively who picked up the money, or exactly where it had come from.

CALLER

Ulasewicz has been identified as the "mysterious caller" who allegedly telephoned James W. McCord to promise executive clemency if McCord would say nothing about the bugging to a federal grand jury.

Earlier, in an interview with United Press International from Hadley, N.Y.,

Ulasewicz said he had no connection at all with the Watergate incident and that he had never met any of seven persons convicted in the bugging affair. But he conceded he was the anonymous caller who allegedly offered McCord executive clemency.

The Senate sources said Ulasewicz has been subpoenaed to testify before the Watergate committee, probably later this week following the testimony of former White House aide John J. Caulfield.

McCord testified Friday that a man with a New York accent made the telephone calls which arranged his meetings with Caulfield. McCord said Caulfield also offered him executive clemency in exchange for his silence.

APPEAR

The committee has called Caulfield, also a former New York city police officer, to appear his week following further testimony by McCord.

One source indicated Ulasewicz will be asked about the telephone call to McCord and that he will be questioned in detail later about other matters because

"Tony has lots more to talk about."

Ulasewicz is reported by the sources to have worked as an undercover White House agent to gather political intelligence.

The New York Daily News reported Sunday that Ulasewicz was once on the payroll of Herbert W. Kalmbach, President Nixon's personal lawyer.

The News said Ulasewicz was on Kalmbach's payroll from 1969 to 1971 and he had conducted investigations of Massachusetts Senator Edward Kennedy's accident on Chappaquiddick Island and
