

From column by Evans and Novak on appointment of Melvin Laird as President's domestic councillor:

Meanwhile, little that the White House was doing pleased Laird. He strongly disapproved of musical chair Cabinet shifts as meaningless cosmetics. He wanted Mr. Nixon to take the initiative in naming a Democrat as independent Watergate prosecutor. He was appalled by inaccuracies in Mr. Nixon's May 22 "national security" statement.

... When Laird and the President finally met at Camp David last Sunday [3 Jun], Mr. Nixon assured him he took no part in the Watergate cover-up. Laird accepted the job that day.
