PANEL IN HOUSTON
SUSPENDS INQUIRY

No Report Issued by Jury
Tracing Watergate Funds

HOUSTON, June 28—A Federal grand jury tracing money used to pay the Watergate burglars has suspended its investigation without reporting. Federal prosecutors said any action the grand jury might take would be announced in Washington.

The money under investigation included $700,000 in cash and checks flown from Houston to Washington on April 5, 1972, two days before the new Federal campaign contributions law took effect.

Part of the money has been linked to the burglary of the Democratic National Committee in the Watergate complex in Washington on June 17, 1972.

Traced by 2 Juries

A Washington grand jury and one in Miami had already traced this money through the Committee for the Re-election of the President to the seven men convicted of the Watergate burglary. Three prosecutors from the staff of the special Watergate prosecutor, Archibald Cox, refused to comment about the new Houston investigation, but an unofficial source said that the Texas grand jury had investigated large contributions made by Texans to Mr. Nixon's re-election in order to evaluate reports that much of the money had come from corporations.

Federal law prohibits political contributions by business corporations.

Robert H. Allen, the chairman of the Gulf Resources and Chemical Corporation of Houston, served as chairman of the Texas Finance Committee to Re-elect the President. He has said that he made a $100,000 contribution to Mr. Nixon's campaign through a Mexico City attorney, Manuel Ogarrio Dag-uerre. The $100,000 was reported to have been paid in Mexico City to Mr. Ogarrio by a subsidiary of Gulf Resources for past legal services. Mr. Allen has said that he then borrowed the money from Mr. Ogarrio, a friend, and that $11,000 in cash and $89,000 in cashiers' checks on a Mexican bank were sent to him in Houston.

The $89,000 in checks was given by the Committee to Re-elect the President to its attorney, G. Gordon Liddy. Campaign officials have testified that Mr. Liddy, who has been sentenced to prison for conspiring to break into the Democratic National Committee headquarters, cashed the checks.

When the Watergate burglars were arrested, they had several thousand dollars of this money in $100 bills.

Mr. Allen, who insisted later that he would not have contributed the money if he had known how it would be used, asked for and got the $100,000 back.

Also Campaign Officials

The $700,000 being investigated since May 10 by the Houston grand jury was reported to have been raised in the Houston area by Mr. Allen and by William C. Liedtke Jr., the president of the Pennzoil Company, and Roy J. Winchester, vice president and Washington lobbyist for Pennzoil.

Mr. Liedtke and Mr. Winchester were Texas regional chairmen of the Finance Committee to Re-elect the President.

The $700,000 under investigation had been flown to Washington on a plane owned by Pennzoil.

Mr. Allen and Mr. Winchester both testified before the Houston grand jury, along with Paul Barrick, the new treasurer of the Finance Committee to Re-elect the President in Washington.
