New Head of I.R.S. Calls Public Trust Agency's Top Goal

NYTimes JUL 1 6 1973 by eileen shanahan

Special to The New York Time

WASHINGTON, July 15 Donald C. Alexander, the new Commissioner of Internal Revenue, believes that one of his most important tasks will be "maintaining public confidence in this agency."

However, he does not believe that he can assign a top priority to investigation of all the various types of wrongdoing that have been alleged during the Senate hearings into the Watergate scandal.

The hearings will resume tomorrow with further testimony by Richard A. Moore, a special counsel to President Nixon, who was on the stand last who was on the stand last Moore is to be followed as a witness by Herbert W. Kalmbach, former personal West Coast attorney for Mr. Nixon.

Mr. Alexander, who became commissioner on May 30, said in an interview that he already had under way his own "in-house investigation" of allegations that "enemies"

Continued on Page 20, Column 4

J.J. JULY 16, 1973 I.R.S. CHIEF SAYS

TRUST IS HIS GOAL have kept some of the money and not reported it as income.

of the Congressional Joint Committee on Internal Revenue-Taxation. But Mr. Alexander said he felt the need to conduct his own inquiry as well "to satisfy ourselves that we have the agency we think we had in the past and we darned well are going to have in the future."

cash during the 1972 Republican Presidential campaign may have kept some of the money

Investigation of some of the other allegations should await further development of specific information, Mr. Alexander said. That was the category into their tax returns audited and friends had tax cases against them dropped.

This is the same question that is being looked into by the staff of the Congressional Joint Committee on Internal Revenue-Taxation. But Mr. Alexander said at least one person whose name at least one person whose name Investigation of some of the at least one person whose name was not on either of the two published lists of Administration "enemies."

To Check Political Gifts

past and we darned well are going to have in the future."

Not First Priority

On the other hand, he said he would not give a No. I priority to investigation of the possibility that some individuals who handled large amounts of contrasted with A saying that B told C that D did something."

Another matter in which the LR.S. is "interested" but to which he does not assign a top priority, he said, is the possibility that some individuals or corporations made political contributions in 1972 and illegally deducted these gifts on their tax returns.

Mr. Alexander, who is 52 years old, is a well known tax lawver and formerly a partner going to go straight down the middle as far as politics is that also get into the tax field, such as Common Cause.

Mr. Alexander said that individuals from such liberal-left organizations "could make meaningful contributions to tax administration and may not have the same views" as the corporate tax lawyers and establishment professors who have previously made up the membership of the advisory group. which he does not assign a top priority, he said, is the possibility that some individuals or corporations made political contributions in 1972 and illegally deducted these gifts on their tax returns.

Mr. Alexander, who is 52 years old, is a well known tax lawyer and formerly a partner in the Cincinnati firm of Dismore, Shohl, Coates & Deupree. He is a graduate of the Harvard Law School and was editor of The Law Review.

When he was nominated to be Commissioner on March 19, he had some ideas about improvements he would like to make in Internal Revenue, Mr. Alexander said.

Now, however, his "new priority" is "maintaining public confidence" in the service, "and what that means is that this organization and I are added.

Concept of Task

The job ahead of him, as he sees it, is "to prove over the long run and in a way that preserves the confidentiality of taxpayer information, that LR.S. is doing it sjob well, and that it's doing it fairly and even-handedly."

"That can only be demonstrated to the public over a long an dsometimes tortuous period of time," he said. "I've got no magic solution because words won't do it."

Among the changes he wants to put into effect are an expansion of the commissioner's advisory group, to include representatives from "the public interest sector."

He has in mind persons from public interest law firms that this organization and I are long run and in a way that prove over the confidentiality of taxpayer information, that it's doing it fairly and even-handedly."

"That can only be demonstrated to the public over a long an dsometimes tortuous period of time," he said. "I've got no magic solution because words won't do it."

Among the changes he wants to put into effect are an expansion of the commissioner's advisory group, to include representatives from "the public interest sector."

He has in in a way that professors who have previously made up the membership of tax audits from or confidence in tax lawyers and establishment professors who in the chical professors who in the chical