

The Taping Stops

Washington

The automatic taping system that has been recording President Nixon's conversations in the Oval Office and other White House rooms since 1971 has been deactivated, the Washington Post learned from a reliable

White House source last night.

There was no indication when the system was turned off. Its disclosure in testimony before the Senate Watergate committee Monday caused a furor.

Washington Post
