A New Kind of Watergate Witnes

John Daniel Ehrlichman

By DOUGLAS E. KNEELAND

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, July 24—Maybe there really are "two Ehrlichmans," as a former White House associate insists, but the Senate Watergate committee certainly say. gate committe certainly saw only one of them today.

The heavy-browed, fre-uently scowling John Daniel entry scowning John Dame.

Ehrlichman who sat under the television

Man lights on the committee's without the stand for in the News committee's witness stand for more than four hours today was a combative, cocky defender of the faith. The "relaxed, easy" fellow who was known around the White House as a "closet liberal," according a "closet liberal," according to his old acquaintance, was nowhere to be seen in the crowded Caucus Room on the third floor of the Old Senate Office Building.

Not that the tanned and muscular - looking former chief domestic affairs adviser to the President didn't smile now and then. But the viser to the President didn't smile now and then. But the smiles were those of a man who enjoys a good scrap—and he came out fighting.

"It's an effective side of Ehrlichman," his former co-workers mused as he watched the baldish head bob and the dark brown rice and fall or dark brows rise and fall ex-pressively on television. "I've seen him under hostile pres-sure before. He doesn't flap, nor does he become a door mat."

Nixon Stalwart

Mr. Ehrlichman was a new kind of witness for the committee, a tough, unapologetic Nixon stalwart who obviously felt that a good offense was the best defense.

Most of those who have testified have been deferen-tial and have at least as-sumed an air of cooperative-

Even John N. Mitchell, the former Attorney General and Presidential campaign direc-

Presidential campaign director, presented a muted version of his usual crusty self in most of his appearances before the committee.

But from Mr. Ehrlichman's opening statement, which was reminiscent of a high school civics lecture as he detailed the duties of the President and the "drudgery" of "work that is really never done," the former domestic affairs adviser seemed to be challenging or chiding teh committee. committee.

Putting on his glasses, Mr. Ehrlichman read the 30-page statement to the seven Senators and their aides as if he were a teacher trying to get through to a particularly slow class. He even read the subheads, such as, "Why didn't everyone know all about Watergate?"

Depended on Dean

Why everyone, including Mr. Nixon, didn't know, Mr. Ehrlichman insisted, was that they depended on John W. Dean 3d to keep them informed and he failed them. "I do not suggest that we were all just too busy to have noticed," Mr. Ehrlichman said "We did notice and we kept informed through John Dean on the assumption that he was giving us complete and accurate information."

accurate information."
Quarreling at length with Mr. Dean's testimony that the Watergate cover-up "was probably the major thing that was occurring" at the White House between June 17 and Sept. 15, 1972, Mr. Ehrlichman said that "it was a very busy time."

And he departed from his

And he departed from his prepared statement to re-mark, "John Dean, on the other hand, never found things so quiet and he planned things so quiet and ne pianned the most expensive honey-moon in the history of the White House staff right along his period."

With that allusion to the $4,850 that Mr. Dean has said he borrowed from cam-paign funds in his possession said he borrowed from campaign funds in his possession for a planned wedding rtip, Mr. Ehrlichman left little doubt as to his feelings about the man who replaced him as the President's counsel.

the President's counsel.

Mr. Daen was dismissed last April 30. Mr. Ehrlichman and H. R. Haldeman, the President's chief of staff, who has been linked by Mr. Dean to the Watergate affair, resigned the same day.

But the John Ehrlichman who sparred vigorously with the committee and its counsel today did not act like an sel today did not act like an unemployed 48-year-old law-yer with a wife and five chil-dren to fed.

Still Nixon's Man

He was still President Nixon's man, no doubt about it—in fact and faith, if not in pay. And from the moment pay. And from the moment this morning when he sat at the witness stand in his neat gray suit, blue shirt and blue-and-red-patterned tie and listened to the sustained applause of the spectators as committee chairman.

Senator Sam J. Ervin Jr., strode into the room, he must have sensed he was on less than friendly ground.

The committee has clashed with the President over his refusal to provide tapes and documents that it considers relevant to its inquiry. Yesterday it issued subpoenas for them, and the crowd obtained in the control of the contro viously was siding with the white-haired North Carolina Democrat in his struggle with the White House.

By late afternoon, Mr. Ehrlichman was tangling Ehrlichman was with Senator Ervin.

with Senator Ervin.

Mr. Ehrlichman had contended earlier that the President had the constitutional authority to permit the burglary of Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist's office by White House investigators to protect the national security.

Concept Challenged

Senator Ervin, who is regarded as the formost Senate authority on the Constitution, had been waiting for hours to challenge that concept.

"Is it your opinion now that the President can authorize burglaries? Senator Ervin asked Mr. Ehrli

Ehrlichman cited statute that he said permitted the President to act to pro-

the President to act to protect national security against foreign intelligence activities. "The foreign intelligence activities has nothing to do with the opinion of Ellsberg's psychiatrist about his intelectual or emotional or psychological state," Senator Ervin declared psychological state," Senator Ervin declared.

"How do you know that?" Mr Ehrlichman asked.

"Because I can undrstand the English language," Mr. Ervin repied sharply. "It's my mother tongue."

The crown liked that. In their eyes, Mr. Ehrlichman had lost another round.

In another part of town, the former White House associate discussed the other John Ehrlichman, the one the associate discussed the other John Ehrlichman, the one the crowd did not see.

"He had a nice sense of family about his Domestic Council," the friend said. "He taken them up to Camp David on weeknds when the President wasn't there."

Then he added:

Then he added: "He's the kind of guy who takes his family backpacking in the Washington woods. Can you imagine that?"

Maybe tomorrow, that John Ehrlichman will be on the witness stand.

John D. Ehrlichman, former Presidential adviser, studying his notes outside the Caucus Room of the Old Senate Office Building before the afternoon session of yesterday's Watergate hearings got under way. The dome of the Capitol is in the background.