Geese and Grass

With reference to the July 21 article about "Johnson Grass" threatening farms in Maryland:

When we lived in Fresno, California, the San Joaquin Valley farmers were also troubled with Johnson grass. Some kept their own geese as "weeders." There were, however, some enterprising poultry men who had several flocks of geese they rented to farmers presumably by the day or week. The geese preferred the Johnson grass to the broad-leaf plants. Almost systematically they cleared the farms, row by row, eliminating this trouble-some grass. No weed-killing chemical was needed. When the geese were fat-tened appropriately off they went to be marketed. Can geese help the Mary-land farmer? land farmer? LOYAL NYE.

Kensington. Wallowing in Watergate JUL 2 7 1973

I read with interest Mr. Nixon's comment that he was going to get on with the important business of government and let others 'wallow in Water-gate.' Mr. Nixon left us with the image of those still interested in Watergate the press, the courts, the special prosethe press, the courts, the special prosecutor, the Ervin Committee, and last but not the least the American people—indulging themselves in Watergate like pigs rolling around a pen full of mud for their own hedonistic gratification.

However, the word 'wallow' has other definitions. When used as a noun it can be defined as 'a state of degredation or degeneracy.' This is an interpretation of the word that the Nivon pretation of the word that the Nixon administration should be familiar with. It has been guilty of criminal acts, grossly unethical conduct, and myriad activities that smack of police state tactics. In other words of activities that have helped to create an atmosphere of degeneracy and degradation in government. Those of us who have been critical of the President's role in the months since Watergate have not been wallowing in Watergate—rather Mr. Nixon's leadership has created a wallow (a state of degeneracy in government).

Mr. Nixon in his little speech upon leaving Bethesda Naval Hospital gave us no encouragement that he is going to attempt to deal with this state of degeneracy either. He refuses to explain his own activities beyond unilateral statements that are self-serving and deny any sort of cross-examination; he refuses to provide any documentation that bears on Watergate, the cover-up, and kindred activities and justifies this by interpreting executive privilege in an incredibly arrogant and destructive manner; and now he apparantly plans to counterattack with the familiar Nixon refrain—they are out to get Nixon. In other words nothing wrong has really occurred and the only problem is a group of conspirators who simply want Nixon's scalp.

The fact is that the American people and the institutions that are trying to discover what happened during the pre and post Watergate period are not wallowing—they are floundering. Floundering because of a President who does not seem to realize that in a state trying to maintain some semblance of democracy criminal acts, unethical acts, police state behavior on the part of government are intolerable. As long as the President continues to behave in this manner we must assume that he is covering-up for himself, or that he does not have the sensitivity to recognize that gross wrongdoing and damage to the Constitution and the Bill of Rights has occurred. In either case he continues to contribute to a state of degeneracy and degradation in our government—to a wallow—from which we may never recover unless the peo-ple, the Senate, the courts refuse to allow him to make a mockery of the

Less for More?

We must all be grateful for Secretary Butz' teachings. He has the rare gift for reducing the most complex problem to a simple axiom that we or dinary taxpayers can comprehend. His latest is truly his best: "You can't get more by paying less" (page 1 of The Post, July 23). May one then venture to ask why, with prices rising steadily under his benign guidance, we seem to be der his benign guidance, we seem to be getting lots less for much more? ANNE RIGER.
