BALLAD OF WATERGATE: Hanley Norins, the legendary advertising figure (Young & Rubicam), dashed off this doggerel on his magic typewriter up at Little River, and it swings right along . . . "Ehrlichman did it to Ziegler, Haldeman did it to Dean, Dean, then, what did he? He did it to Liddy who'd done it to Hunt in between. Magruder he did it to Mitchell and Mitchell got Martha aboard, Who did it to Gray who had to repay by doing it twice to McCord. Kissinger did it to Agnew, and Spiro, his back to the wall, said 'Frank, put the fix on, let's do it to Nixon, the one who's been bleeping us all'" . . . Apologies to Hanley for bleeping the stronger term he used. The Manchester Guardian, in printing his poem, substituted "screwing" but British journalism is notoriously loose.
