C.I.A. Study Said Ellsberg Viewed Action as Patriotic

By SEYMOUR M. HERSH

Special to The New York Times

initial psychological assessment Los Angeles. of Dr. Daniel Ellsberg concluded that he was motivated by "what berg noted that the report, favhe deemed a higher order of patriotism" in turning over the Pentagon papers to the press in 1971 of C.I.A. study Ellsberg is on Page 10.

New York Times today, debearing a special responsibility" regarding the Vietnam war.

rejected by the special White House investigating unit that

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2-The unit later broke into the office Central Intelligence Agency's of Dr. Ellsberg's psychiatrist in Asked for comment, Dr. Ellsguess as late as August, 1971, The study, a copy of which it just wasn't acceptable to sugwas made available to The gest that an American citizen could conscientiously be impelled to take action that would help bring truth to his fellow citizens."

In testimony today before the scribed Dr. Ellsberg as a bril- Senate Watergate committee, liant and highly motivated man Richard Helms, former Director who saw "himself as having a of Central Intelligence, said special mission, and indeed as that the White House had expressed disappointment over the Ellsberg study and had de-It was this study, prepared manded a second effort, which in early August, 1971, that was

A second witness, Gen. Rob-

requested it. Members of this Continued on Page 10, Column 6

Continued From Page 1, Col. 3

ert E. Cushman Jr., the Marine Corps Commandant, who was Mr. Helms's chief deputy in 1971, testified that during his three years of active duty with the intelligence agency "I don't recall any other [psychological study] being made on an American." The process is usually reserved for foreign leaders, he said, as an aid to analysts.

Goal of Break-in

Goal of Break-in

In recent testimony before the Senate Watergate committee, John D. Ehrlichman, the former White House adviser, acknowledged that the break-in into the office of the psychiatrist, Dr. Lewis I. Fielding, had been prompted by the desire to obtain more psychologocal data about Dr. Ellsberg.

Last week the committee released a memorandum to Mr.

leased a memorandum to Mr. Ehrlichman from David R.

Ehrlichman from David R. Young Jr., a co-director of the special investigations unit, noting that "we have receivied the C.I.A. preliminary psychological study which I must say I am disappointed in and consider very superficial."

According to the memo, Mr. Young subsequently requested and received authority from Mr. Ehrlichman to undertake "a covert operation . . . to examine all the medical files still held by Ellsberg's psychoanalyst covering the two-year period in which he was undergoing analysiis."

The break-in, staged over the

The break-in, staged over the Labor Day weekend by E. Howard Hunt Jr. and G. Gordon Liddy, who subsequently participated in the Watergate break-in, was unsuccessful.

Campaign Planned

A memo from Mr. Young to Mr. Ehrlichman introduced at the Senate committee hearings suggested that one motive behind the California break-in was to find adverse information that could be provided to the press as part of an anti-Ellsberg campaign that was being mapped in mid-1971 in the White House.

In addition, Mr. Ehrlichman repeatedly testified during his often referred to the plumbers team because it was trying to plug leaks of information, with any adverse information about Dr. Ellsberg, who had served as a Defense Department analyst and Marine Corps officer.

Dr. Daniel Ellsberg

The study, prepared by Dr. Bernard Malloy, a C.I.A. staff psychologist, noted that "there is no suggestion that subject [Dr. Ellsberg] thought anything treasonous in his act."

'Castigated Himself'

"Rather," it added, "he seemed to be responding to what he deemed a higher order of patriotism. His exclusion of the three volumes of the papers concerned with the secret negotiations would support this."

The exclusion referred to Mr.

Ellsberg's decision not to re-lease four—not three—volumes of the Pentagon papers dealing with the various United States attempts to negotiate an end to the war through third parties and neutralist Governments.

Concluding that Dr. Ellsberg seemed to view himself as having a special mission, the study noted that "on several occasions he castigated himself for not releasing the papers earlier" because of the continuing toll of the war.

But elsewhere, the study might have been motivated by "some of his long-standing personality needs" in deciding to release the highly classified Pentagon papers.

His early academic brilliance had instilled in him the notion that "the was special and decided in the control of the control of had instilled in him the notion that "he was special and destined for greatness," the study said. Thus, there subsequently were problems in what was referred to as hi "mid-life"—the age period between 35 and 45—when he did not achieve full success. "One can only sustain the role of 'bright young man' so long," the study noted.

Witnesses have told the Watergate committee that the C.I.A. did not rely on any first-hand five days before the committee that the Government had information that Dr. Ellsberg may have provided copies of the Pentagon papers to the Soviet Embassy in Washington.

Nothing in the C.I.A. study provided the investigating unit, often referred to the plumbers in way definitive."

ergate committee that the C.I.A. did not rely on any first-hand psychiatric evaluation in preparing their assessments.

The C.I.A. document made available today included this disclaimer: "As the data base is fragmentary, and there has been no direct clinical evaluation of the subject, this indirect assessment should be considered highly speculative and in no way definitive." no way definitive."