The hullaballoo over the White House tapes has raised reports of another secret tape, which could settle a great historical controversy.

Excellent sources tell us that Anna Chennault, the Chi-nese widow of World War II hero Gen. Claire Chennault, was picked up on tape as she allegedly lobbied with the South Vietnamese ambassador to sabotage a peace confer-ence on the eve of the 1968 presidential election.

This election-eve peace effort might have won the close election for Hubert Hum phrey. Instead, Saigon issued a statement opposing the peace conference and refusing statement to participate. This made the abortive peace effort look like a last-minute political trick to save Humphrey from defeat. Humphrey now believes the Saigon statement cost him the election.

Was Madame Chennault responsible for disrupting the ence before he had peace effort? The facts are in his ducks in a row.' dispute, but this much is acknowledged by all sources. Richard Nixon's campaign manager, John Mitchell, had asked Madame Chennault to keep the campaign informed on developments in Southeast Asia.

Footnote: Humphrey told us he had been informed of Madame Chennault's alleged intervention but not of the existence of any secret tape. Humphrey said he sent one of his own campaign aides, James Rowe, to the South Vietnamese ambassador with a message. Humphrey directed Rowe to tell the ambassador that if South Vietnam's President Thieu did not come to the truce table and if Humphrey should be elected, Thieu would rue the day."

Coup d'etat: An anticonsumer coup d'etat appears to be under way in the ranks of the National Motor Vehicle Safety Advisory Council. which advises the Secretary of Transportation on auto safety. At the 1973 "congress," General Motors executive Trevor Jones, an industry delegate, convinced the council to hold its 1974 symposium in conjunc-tion with the annual convention of the Society of Automotive Engineers (SAE).

Later, however, some council members learned that the industry-dominated SAE would administer the entire congress. The auto men would arrange the program, fix hotel assignments and even decide which papers would be pre-

Council member Dale Hogue, a proconsumer Washington attorney, dispatched a letter to Jones expressing his concern that the council would become "an instrument of industry" of industry.

"I realize I was remiss in voting for the resolution without investigating its ramifica-tions . . .," Hogue continued. "SAE is regarded as an extension of the motor vehicle industry inasmuch as its main body of members is from the auto industry ... Therefore (our) relations with the SAE should be at arm's length .

Since receiving Hogue's letter, Jones is reconsidering the arrangement with the SAE. The auto engineers, however, are confident that when the dust settles, the automotive industry itself may well be telling the government what is safe and what isn't. They already have begun making ho-tel arrangements for the 1974 1000 joint conference.
