WASHINGTON — As the Senate special committee resumes its inquiry tomorrow here's where the other official investigations stand: Six of the original seven defendants pleaded guilty and a seventh was found guilty. They are awaiting sentencing. Five of the six who plead guilty have asked to change their pleas and stand trial. Decisions pending on that.

In addition, former Nixon campaign officials Jeb Stuart Magruder and Fred LaRue have plead guilty to charges stemming from the Watergate crime itself. They await sentencing.

Washington special prosecutors are continuing to take testimony before the original "main Watergate" and grand jury, with more indictments of White House officials expected.

Those indictments are likely to be delayed until after the legal struggle over grand jury access to White House tapes is settled. The Court of Appeals now has that case under consideration, with appeal to the Supreme Court likely.

White House - hired political saboteur Donald Segretti has agreed to plead guilty to four federal charges of falsifying campaign materials to hurt Democrats in Florida. Segretti associates there have pleaded guilty and been sentenced to one year and $1,000 fines.

In Washington Segretti is cooperating with a special prosecutors' task force investigating "dirty tricks." That task force is working with a second grand jury.

Former White House aides John Ehrlichman, Egil Krogh, David Young, G. Gordon Liddy all indicted by a Los Angeles County grand jury for 1971 burglary of Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist's office.

A special prosecutor's Washington task force is investigating the "plumbers." One apparent target — former White House power Charles Colson. Some phases of this investigation are also dependent upon the outcome of the fight for the tapes.

Former Nixon officials John Mitchell and Maurice Stans, indicted by a New York federal grand jury, are set for late October trial on charges stemming from a secret $200,000 campaign contribution by financier Robert Vesco. Also indicted:

Vesco (in hiding outside the country) and New Jersey politician Harry Sears.

Mitchell and Stans have subpoenaed the White House tapes to use in their defense, and part of their trial may hang on the outcome of the tapes battle.

Another Washington task force under Special Prosecutor Archibald Cox is looking at this area. It has squeezed admissions of illegal corporate campaign contributions from American and Braniff airlines, Minnesota Mining & Phillips, Gulf and Ashland Oil.

Other corporations may confess — and some may be charged if they don't. That task force is also scrutinizing the "laundering" of campaign cash through Mexico.
