Baltimore....

The special grand jury investigating allegations of contract kickbacks against Vice President Spiro Agnew heard more testimony yesterday and returned a new indictment against N. Dale Anderson, the Democrat who succeeded Agnew as the county executive of suburban Baltimore county.

In addition to the 39-count indictment brought against Anderson last August 23, the grand jury yesterday voted four more counts charging him with attempting to evade federal income tax. payments from 1969 through that Anderson had understated the tax due by $68. 000, were returned in the courtroom of U.S. District Judge Frank A. Kaufman.

The indictment charges that Anderson had failed to report more than $130,000 of taxable income during the four-year period, nearly all of it earned in 1970 and 1972.

INDICTMENTS

In the August 23 indictment. Anderson was charged with receiving $46.420 in kickback payments from eight engineering, architectural- and consulting firms doing business with the county.

Vice President Agnew's.

The four counts, asserting lawyers, meanwhile, took no visible steps yesterday to subpoena the Justice Department officials and new.;men from whom they hope to extract, under oath, the identity of the government prosecutors whom Agnew has accused of "maliciously and illegally" leaking details of the grand jury probe of his affairs.

> The assertion that he has been the victim of prejudicial publicity, inspired by news leaks from federal prosecutors, is a major part of Agnew's argument before U.S. District Judge Walter E: Hoffman that the grand jury proceedings here have been "poisoned" againsthim and should be halted by the court, without further investigation and without indictment.

FRIEND

Ormsby S. Moore, longtime friend and former key aide to Agnew when he was county executive, was seen entering the courthouse yesterday morning with his attorney.

Another witness to appear yesterday was Eugene Y. Hsi of Hsi Associates, a consulting engineering firm that has received consulting contracts from the Baltimore county and state, governments.
