

McCloskey's

Case for

Impeachment

Congressman Paul N. (Pete) McCloskey disclosed last night what he considers to be some of the evidence necessary to impeach President Nixon.

The Woodside Republican, active in current House efforts to impeach Mr. Nixon, told a Stanford University audience he thought the President's acceptance of $427,500 in campaign contributions from dairymen — after a 1971 increase in federal milk price supports — smacked of bribery.

Another ground on which Mr. Nixon could be impeached, McCloskey said, was the President's approval in 1970 of domestic secret police — the "White House plumbers unit" — which used unlawful surveillance methods such as wiretapping and burglary.

McCloskey also cited the President's offer of the FBI directorship to the Daniel Ellsberg trial judge — at the time of the trial — and the White House-sponsored break-in into the office of Ellsberg's psychiatrist as evidence of Presidential "malfeasance." *
