

An article in The New York Times on Monday reported erroneously that The Atlanta Journal was one of several newspapers that had called, in editorials, for the resignation of President Nixon. In an editorial in its issue of Nov. 1, The Journal said "Let the President continue to function, and let us hope that if the worst is proven about him that he is gentleman and patriot enough to resign and spare the nation his impeachment and trial."

●
The Congressional resolution on war powers printed yesterday said in error that Congress could be convened to consider a Presidential report on imminent hostilities if 80 per cent of the members requested it. The figure should have been 30 per cent.