

Nixon's Financial Report Today

Washington

The White House will make public today "all of the pertinent information" regarding President Nixon's personal finances, deputy press secretary Gerald L. Warren said yesterday.

Warren said the President's financial report would respond to all charges currently being raised against him, but he did not say what specific information would be disclosed.

"The intent of the President is to disclose . . . all of the pertinent information" relating to allegations against him and his family, — Warren said.

"The President wants to clear up any doubts."

Warren said the release of the financial report was part of several actions planned by Mr. Nixon to respond to charges that he enriched himself at public expense during his tenure as chief executive.

Warren also said the President is determined to serve out the remaining three years of his term despite mounting pressure for his impeachment or resignation.
