

Editor — Fifty million Americans are sick and tired of those entities, only slightly less mysterious than UFOs, called "White House aides."

What in God's name is a White House aide? And why is he so loath to say who he is? If he is an employee of the U.S. government, the people should know who and what he is. How many aides are there? Does anybody know? What department of the government are they in? What are the qualifications? Just what do they do?

Isn't it about time the media begin to refuse to accept their dubious poop until and unless it is attested to by a responsible human being with a name and address?

How is a senior adviser different from a junior adviser? It's all carif and flapdoodle, and serves only to further alienate the citizenry from the people they pay to serve them . . .
