

SILENT SERVICE

The Congressional committee studying the impeachment of President Nixon is taking extraordinary public-relations precautions. At a private meeting, the House Judiciary Committee's two special counsels, John Doar for the Democrats and Albert Jenner for the GOP, agreed that neither would give interviews, on or off the record. And the committee chairman, Rep. Peter Rodino, has had his staff comb his 25 years of public life, indexing any points that might raise questions and preparing ready-to-go answers for any queries.
