

A Plurality Prefer Ford Over Nixon

• By George Gallup

Princeton, N.J.

If given a choice, a plurality of the U.S. electorate would prefer Vice President Gerald Ford to President Nixon as chief executive for the remaining three years of Mr. Nixon's term.

The latest nationwide Gallup survey shows 46 per cent saying they would prefer Ford compared to 32 per cent who choose Mr. Nixon. About one person in five, 22 per cent, are undecided or do not express an opinion.

Although Republicans in the survey are 2 to 1 in favor of Mr. Nixon, Democrats would prefer Ford by a 3 to 1 margin. The vote is much closer among voters who describe themselves as independents, a group as numerous as Republicans. Among independents, 45 per cent say they would rather have Ford be President for the next three years, compared to 35 per cent who choose Mr. Nixon — close to the national percentages.

Following is the question asked in the survey to determine which man the public would like to have serve as President for the next three years:

"Here is a question about President Richard Nixon and Vice President Gerald Ford: If you had a choice, which man would you rather have as President between now and the next presidential election in 1976 — Nixon or Ford?"
