Senate Panel Decides Not to Call Jaworski

United Press International

The Senate Judiciary Committee decided yesterday against inviting Watergate Special Prosecutor Leon Jaworski to testify on the White House refusal to give him more tapes or documents.

Senators attending a closed session of the committee reported later that opposition developed to a proposal by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.) to send Jaworski a letter saying the panel would welcome his testimony at a time of his choosing.

Some Republicans reportedly objected that any public testimony by Jaworski would lead to questioning on what evidence he has amassed and thus could jeopardize the rights of future Watergate defendants. The Watergate grand juries are expected to hand up indictments late this week.

Jaworski reported to the committee by letter two weeks ago that the White House had refused to provide evidence he had requested.

The committee agreed that Chairman James O. Eastland (D-Miss.) and Sen. Philip A. Hart (D-Mich.), a liberal member, would draft a response which Hart said would "reaffirm our interest in being informed."

"I don't want him up here unless he feels he should come up," Hart said. Jaworski has been quoted as saying he felt public testimony now by him would be inappropriate.
