Gilot Children Heirs

Claude and Paloma Ruiz-Picasso, offspring of the late Pablo Picasso and Françoise Gilot, his longtime mistress, were officially recognized yesterday as legal heirs of the great artist. They are thus entitled to a share of Picasso's large estate. The decision was handed down by a court in Paris, the Rivera, after the intervention of lawyers for the widow, Jacqueline Roque, and those for Paloma, a month-long out-of-court settlement appears to have materialized. The estate includes a collection of his paintings, sculpture, and the art of two castles. Claude Ruiz-Picasso, 25, is one of the beneficiaries named in the will. The rights of the heirs are being legitimized.

Administrations, the chair will be held by a senior professor at the school.

Mrs. Johnson will be in Washington today to honor another Johnson Administration official, Ramsey Clark, who was Attorney General. She will unveil a 5-by-7-foot portrait of Mr. Clark in the Great Hall of the main Department of Justice building. The portrait was executed by Robert Berks, the New York artist who sculptured the bust of John F. Kennedy in the grand foyer of the Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in the capital.

Appearing yesterday on the National Broadcasting Company's "Today" TV show, Martha Mitchell repeated her contention that her husband, John, now on trial here for alleged influence peddling, had been "framed." "I think I can almost document it," she said. Asked if she thought President Nixon should be impeached, she said, "I have no idea." The wife of the former Attorney General said she was at work on an autobiography in which, she suggested, she would document her contentions.
