

Payments To David Delayed

Washington

Like some other veterans, David Eisenhower, President Nixon's son-in-law, has been having trouble getting his GI benefit checks, but David says it's his own fault.

Eisenhower told reporters he did not get his check, which helps finance his schooling, for six weeks because he failed to send in the required computer card.

He is a freshman at George Washington University Law School.

Veterans groups have raised public complaints about difficulties some ex-GIs have encountered in obtaining the veterans benefits.
