
Nixon's Plans For His Day In Houston

Washington

President Nixon will decorate three astronauts and inspect the joint U.S.-Soviet Apollo-Soyez project when he goes to Houston today to answer questions before a national convention of broadcast executives, the White House said yesterday.

Continuing his efforts to muster public support through more frequent personal appearances, Mr. Nixon is to address the National Association of Broadcasters at 5 p.m. (PDT) and answer questions during a nationally televised session.

The President will stay overnight in Houston and return to Washington tomorrow, White House press spokesman Gerald Warren said.
