Lawyer Describes Actions He Took for Industrialist

Special to The New York Times

LOS ANGELES, May 2--A glimpse at the wide range of Howard R. Hughes's interests in shaping public affairs was given today in the trial of Robert A. Maheu's $17.3-million defamation action against the industralist's personal hold-ing company, the Summa Corporation.

Among other things, accord-ing to sworn testimony, Mr. Hughes wanted to block racial integration of Las Vegas public integration of Las Vegas public schools. Mr. Hughes said in a 1972 telephonic press conference of Mr. Maheu, once his Nevada operations manager, that he "stole me blind." For nine week the Hughes interests presented evidence to a Federal trial jury to prove truth as a defense and this week Mr. Maheu be-gan to present evidence justify-ing his actions. Among the items of evidence

Ing his actions. Among the items of evidence presented inMr. Maheu's be-half was a deposition under oath taken on Feb. 21, 1973, from Thomas Bell, a Las Vegas lawyer who represented the Hughes interests during the period Mr. Maheu managed Mr. Hughes's Nevada empire.

Evidence Admitted

Evidence Admitted Over the objections of Mr. Hughes's lawyers, Federal Judge Harry Pregerson ad-mitted into evidence a long list of actions that Mr. Bell testified he had been directed to under-take in Mr. Hughes's behalf. Mr. Bell said that his orders mostly came from the Hughes' staff of male secretaries, whom he named as Howard Eckersley, John Holmes, Roy Crawford, Levar Myler and George Fran-com. He also had some in-structions for Mr. Maheu, he said. He said he had never met Mr. Hughes. Mr. Bell had been sub-poenaed by Hughes attorneys for the deposition and ordered to produce his papers that showed his work assignments for the Hughes Nevada ope-rations. Mr. Bll testified he was told
