

Nixon Doesn't Need Advice, Goldwater Says

Washington

Senator Barry M. Goldwater (Rep-Ariz.) said Saturday that Republican leaders should not attempt to call on President Nixon and ask him to resign.

"If anybody tried that right now, I think he'd tell them to go to hell," Goldwater told the Washington Post.

Goldwater, whose views carry great weight in his party and receive careful attention at the White House, said events of recent days have not changed his opinion that Mr. Nixon will surely resign if the House votes to impeach him, but not before that.

"When the time comes to resign, he he'll know it" without outside advice, said Goldwater. As of now, he added, the evidence does not support a call for resignation.
