

Rebozo Accuses Senate Panel Of Attempt to Humiliate Him

WASHINGTON, May 20 (AP) — President Nixon's friend Charles G. Rebozo accused the Senate Watergate committee today of trying to humiliate and embarrass him by subpoenaing records of every financial institution and every business he has dealt with since 1968.

Mr. Rebozo also accused the committee's investigators of lying about the testimony of a principal Watergate figure and of the "despicable practice" of leaking false stories to the news media.

The Miami banker's allegations were in a complaint that amends an earlier suit against the Watergate committee. He asks the United States District Court to stipulate what rights he has in the investigation.

In his original suit, Mr. Rebozo alleged that the committee had obtained "false" information from Herbert W. Kalmbach, formerly Mr. Nixon's attorney, and had released it "maliciously" to the press. The suit also asked that a subpoena of detailed financial records dealing with loans to or from the President, Patricia Nixon Cox and the President's two brothers be voided.

Mr. Rebozo said the committee's investigative staff was trying to justify a large number of subpoenas "by making false misrepresentations" to the Senators on the committee concerning a Nixon campaign contribution by A. D. Davis, an executive with the Winn Dixie grocery chain.

Mr. Rebozo contends that he took the $50,000 contribution from Mr. Davis and turned it over to proper campaign officials.

He alleged that committee investigators, Terry Lenzner, Scott Armstrong and Carmine Bellino, had said falsely that a Nixon campaign official, Frederick C. LaRue, to whom Mr. Rebozo said he had given the money, testified that he never received the contribution.
