

Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, left, President Nixon and Egyptian President Anwar Sadat at a Cairo floor show.

United Press International

Another

Diplomatic

Success

The "Ambassador of Love" got into the diplomatic act in Cairo Wednesday, on an apparently successful mission.

Souhair Zaki, who uses that name for her Egyptian belly-dancing act, sent President Nixon and Egyptian President Anwar Sadat into laughter and then a whispering session with her professional gyrations at a state dinner in Koubbeh Palace.

Mr. Nixon slapped his knee in glee and seemed to be having a marvelous time. Mrs. Nixon, whom the dancer kissed in passing, "did not appear quite so amused," according to the Associated Press.

"I had a marvelous time," announced Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, through whose brown curls the belly dancer drew her hands. "I saw some old friends."

He was apparently referring to Nagwa Fouad, another belly dancer, with whom Kissinger had been photographed in an Iranian night club during a Middle East trip before his marriage.

Another big fan was White House chief of staff Gen. Alexander M. Haig. "I would like to see more of that," he commented after the performance.